

Church autonomy doctrine protects religious institutions from denominational control, ensuring that each church can control their own beliefs, internal affairs, and ensuring that each church operates as an individual congregation.